Which circles am I members of?

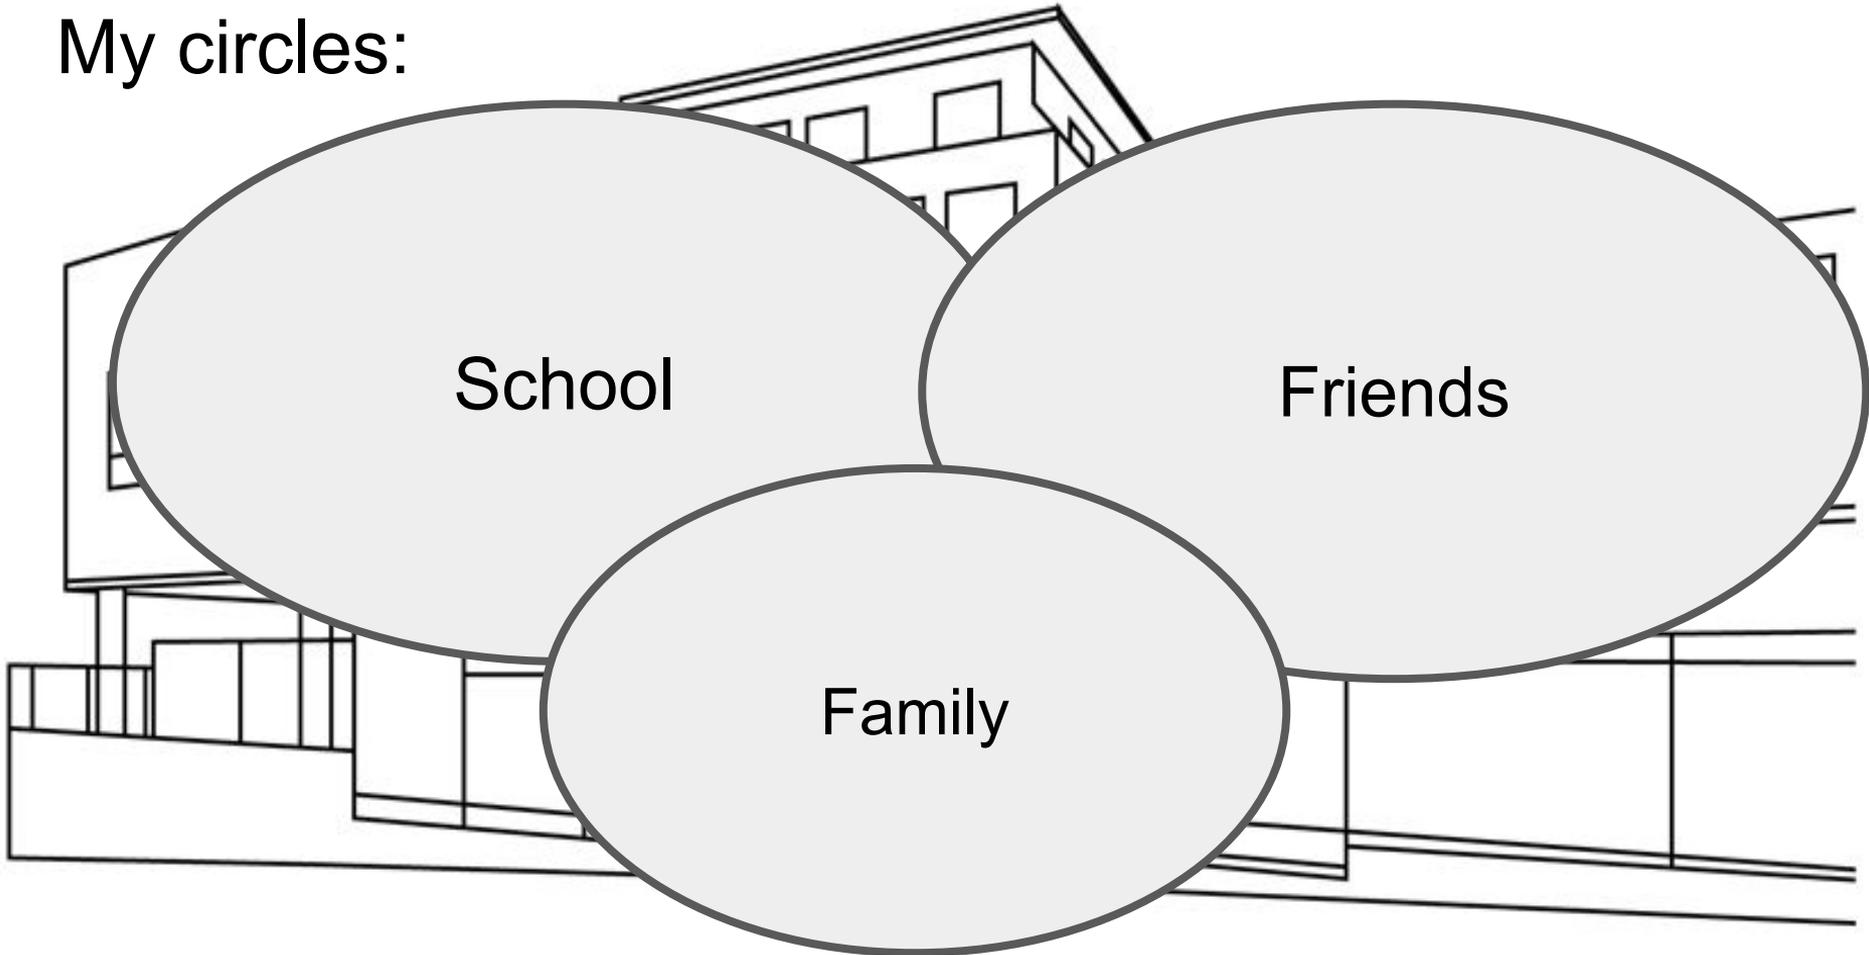

Who is in your circle?

What communities are you members of?

Can you use your piece of paper to write down the names of the circles you are members of.

Now can you draw a circle round them showing me where these circles might overlap, for example are some of your friends also people in your circle at school?

My circles:

What is the impact of the circles I am part of?

How important is your circle?

Can you make a list of the ways in which your circle can affect your life?

Now can you take two coloured pens and colour code them, red for negative, and yellow for positive?

Now think about the answers to the following questions now we have looked at what a circle is, the fact we can be members of one circle and that the effects of our circle can be positive and negative:

1. Why is your circle important?
2. Why is your circle important during this time?
3. How will your circle be important moving forward?

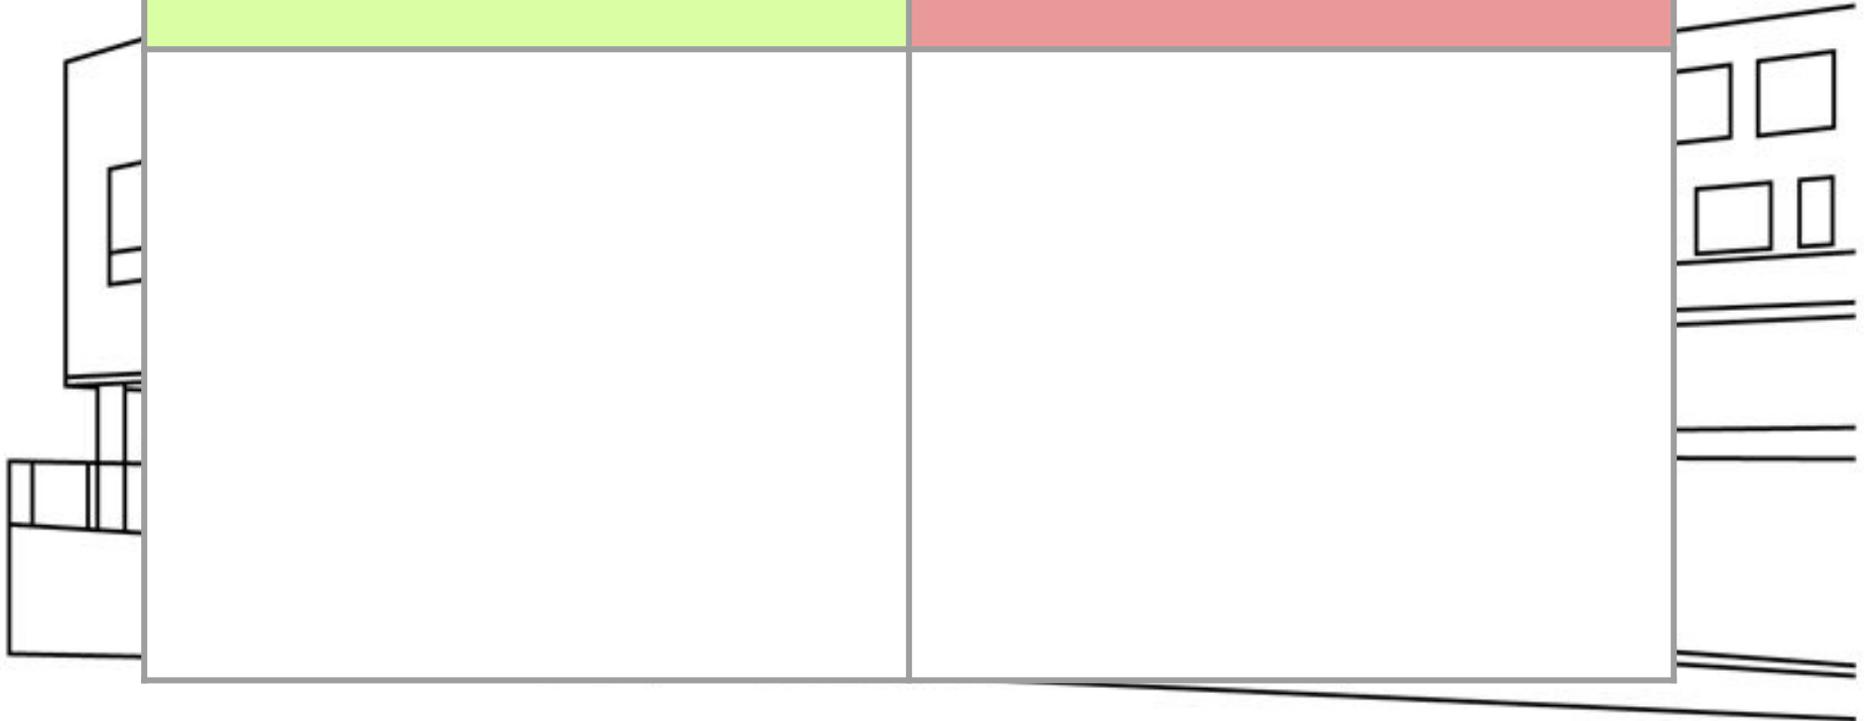

Qualities that make a positive and supportive member of a circle:

- Can you now draw a table on your paper, with two columns.
- Can you label one side positive and one side negative.
- Can you now list the qualities that people in any of your circle might have that are positive and have a positive effect your your wellbeing and education.
- Can you now do the same for qualities that people have which may not have a positive effect on you or your wellbeing or may hold you back in terms of your education and development.

Our school as a community:

- How do you think our school and the people in it support us and form part of our school community?
- Why do you think having a positive and supportive school community is particularly important now considering what is happening in the world at the moment?
- How can you contribute positively towards creating circles of support and supporting the EGA community bearing in mind what we have discussed about the qualities of those you want in your circle?
